JOSEPH M. TERRELL NAMED SENATOR

Ex-Governor Succeeds Late Great Russian Author Answers Senator Steve Clay.

APPOINTED BY GOV. BROWN FAMILY WAS AT HIS BEDSIDE

Action of Georgia's Governor No Surprise to the People, as It Was Gen erally Thought That Mr. Terrell Would Be Given the Honor.

Joseph Merlwether Terrell is the new United States senator from Geor

The proclamation naming former Governor Terrell to succeed the late Senator Clay was made out by Governor Brown and read at a surprise dinner party given at the mansion in honor of Georgia's junior senator.

The naming of Governor Terrell will probably cause no surprise throughout the state. He was the one man most conspicuously mentioned for the post, and the one who was universally expected to win the coveted honor.

Throughout the two heated cam paigns of Governor Brown he was the power behind the throne; he organ ized the state, and his hand was on every detail of the organization that won victory two years ago, and that mustered 100,000 men to the polls this

A former governor of Georgia and former attorney general of the state, Senator Terrell has been conspicuous for his interest in education for the boys and girls of the state. The establishment of the eleven district agri cultural schools, which have since come into being, was made an issue in his campaign of 1902, when he first ran for governor, and authorized during his incumbency in that office.

Senator Terrell served in the lower house in the sessions of 1884 and 1886 and in the senate which convened in 1890. He was elected attorney general in 1892 and served until 1902, when he resigned to make the race for governor. In that campaign he made over 120 speeches and de feated two able opponents, Hon. Du Pont Guerry, of Bibb, and J. H. Estill,

He served in the office of governor for four years and eight months, being given an extra length of time, owing to the action of the legislature in changing the time of meeting of the legislature from October to June. He retired from the governor's chair on July 1, 1906, and has since been en gaged in the practice of law in At-

COUNT TOLSTOI IS CALLED TO BEYOND

Last Call.

Tolatol, Seeking Solitude, Was Over come by Fatigue and Passed His Last Days at Small Railway Station on Shores of Black Sea.

Count Leo Tolstol died peacefully Saturday. Dr. Makovelsky and the other attending physicians and Count ess Tolstoi were at his side when the end came. It was recognized long before his case was hopeless, and at 5 o'clock in the morning, after the countess had been summoned and the other members of the family had gath ered in an adjoining room, the physiclans issued a bulletin, announcing that the activity of the heart had almost ceased, and that Tolstoi's condition was extremely dangerous.

Several of the physicians were greatly overcome by the approaching death of Russia's great writer.

Tolstoi, accompanied only by Dr. Makovelsky, left his home at Yasnays Poliana for the purpose of ending his days in solitude, to which he more and more inclined during his later years. His pilgrimage led him to the monastery at Shamardino, in the province of Kaluga, where he remained as the guest of his sister, Marie. Learning that his retreat had been discovered, he insisted upon proceeding on his journey to the Caucasus where he hoped to spend his last days close to the Tolstoian colony, on the shores of the Black sea. But, during the railroad journey, he was overcome with exhaustion and the cold, and Dr. Makovelsky was compelled to have him transferred to the flag station at Astapova, where he was made as comfortable as possible in the rude wooden building.

For five days he had lain there. suffering first from bronchitis and later from inflammation of the lungs. Specialists were called from Moscow and other places, but, notwith standing their efforts, the heart of the great Russian responded but feebly to the restoratives and stimulants administered. On Saturday the attacks of heart failure increased alarmingly, and many hours prior to the end the physicians had given up all hope.

POLITICAL UPHEAVAL.

Republicans Oust Democrate From Many Offices.

Probably few counties in Georgia have ever witnessed anything like the political upheaval or revolution that has just taken place in Fannin. Democratic officials who had held office for years were ousted and republicans put in their places. Offices held by democrats for a quarter of a century were turned over to repub licans.

In fact, the republicans made clean aweep of it, turning out every democratic official in the county, and Fannin's political complexion has taken on new and startling hues.

Only the senator from the forty first was saved by the democrats from the otherwise complete wreck; but J. R. Kincaid, democrat, won out for the senate with the aid of the other counties in the district.

Following it all has come quite crop of indictments, charging vote it is claimed votes bought right and left, and, as the re sult of the grand jury's investiga tions, many true bills were found.

At Bloomington, Ill., Chris Freder ick, a retired farmer, bought a ceme tery lot and monument and mailea check to an undertaker with in structions to find his body on the lot Frederick's body was found with a bullet in the brain.

Three white men wrecked the safe in the Maner Trading Company's store at Manor, near Waycross, Ga. took $300 in cash, valuable deeds and notes, $1,400 in charge slips and caused $2,000 damage with nitroglycerin. They were pursued, but escaped in the darkness.

BACK TO THE OLD HOMESTEAD

T the foot of the hill where the turnpike swerved sharply to the left to avoid climbing the abrupt elevation and close by the brook, which, finding its source somewhere among the hilltops, mean dered leisurely through swamp and swale and cut the farm squarely in two, stood the old homestead. moss grown shingled roof peeped mod estly from behind a screen of age-old trees, and the low down sagging foun dations were scarcely anywhere visible behind the rampant growth of rose bushes that clambered halfway up the south side of the house. There were illacs grown into trees, syringas that crowded half across the gravel walk, a giant honeysuckle vine that had been choked and pruned back until its gnarl ed old trunk resembled a grotesque freak of nature. The old bomestead had housed and reared seven generations of men and women of the same name, but it had come to pass that those of the seventh generation were widely scattered and the old homestead no longer knew them. There were seven of this gen eration-seven boys-and the last to leave the old homestead had gone forth, like the sheltered so many of their ancestors But there was loneliness in the mother heart. When the first son had bro ken away from the farm the pang had been sharp and cruel, but there were six left behind. Then the second had grown restless and followed in the footsteps of the elder. The third waited a few years, silently tilling the fertile farm and watching for his chance. It came one day with unexpected abrupt

"Mother, I'm going to the city tomor row," he said at the close of a hard day's work in the fields. "My opportunity has come."

There was no open opposition, but the heartstrings were quivering. So the third son went, and after him the fourth. In a few years the remaining sturdy babies had grown to the stature of manhood, and they, too, cast longing eyes cityward. Would not one of them remain on the farm? The last to go had been her favorite.

for was he not the baby? And with his going the light seemed to go out of the world for the aged couple. But these two were of ploneer stock, and they had met and overcome adversity in many forms, and in time they fell enough to emback upon each other's company and found a measure of contentment. There were seven sons, and each week seven letters left the homestead mailed to different addresses. One went to Chicago, another to New York, a third to Boston, two to St. Louis, one far off to the Pacific coast and the last to a nearby city. Monday was devoted to thoughts of the eldest, and the mother brain and heart put into his letter which he had loved. He had been devoted to the live stock, and she recorded faithfully the details of Billy, his pet horse, had long since died, but another colt had been named after him, and he was always held in reserve for his absent owner.

Tuesday's letter was more difficult of composition. It called her forth into the woods to get news, for the second son had been a roamer and a friend of every writing. It was all about crops, the condition of the north and south fields, the probable yield per acre and in harvest time an account of the results. On Thursday her letter was addressed to the young architect in New York, and she spoke of the things which he had loved, and Friday she roamed the woods again for material, for he of San Francisco was the hunter and trapper of the family, and Saturdays

J. H. Odell, Rufus Dazelas, a Mex ican, and an unidentified man were killed at Houston, Texas, in the yards of the Houston Belt and Terminal Co. But the rush of life in the cities made the farm seem a long way off. Letter writing was oftentimes irksome, and the seven sons had duties that absorbed their time and strength The letters grew fewer and their length shorter. On the old homestead the aged couple inboriously read over and over again the brief epistles, pon dering and thinking and speculatingand sighing. In due time the seven sons forgot

"Don't worry, mother," soothed the "They have their families and their cares, and we must be content." "It is not that," she murmured, "but" -and the eyes had a frightened look in them-"I do not feel equal to-to writing-the letters any more. I-Ifind them a burden now."

The man gently pressed the hand that had penned the daily letters "Rest, then, mother, rest! They will not"- He stopped, he could not say they would not miss them, and yet the quivering heart at his side knew he meant it. "That is it," she replied slowly: "they will not miss them, and that is-what-hurts." The eyes drooped, and the bead rested heavily on the shoulder by her side. They sat there a long time watching the fading light and the com ing up of the new moon. The dew of the evening wet them before they rose slowly and made their way inside. Long habit and training cannot be changed in a day or night, and a mother's yearning for her sons insisted that some message should be sent, but each week the letters grew shorter and there was no heart or life in them. Sometimes they were so perfunctory that one was merely a duplicate of the other, a mere reference to the weather and crops and an assurance that all were well. The hand copied from day to day what the brain had dictated for one. There was little variation.

A week before Thanksgiving she looked anxiously for letters from her sons. Each day they drove a mile to the village for their mail, but the letters were not there. Two days before the event the frail body was keyed to intense suspense. On the morrow one of them surely would write and gladden her heart. But they returned from the postoffice without the letter.

The two did not hear the outside noises, nor the rattle of the lumbering stage, nor the lifting of the latch. When they raised their eyes the room was full of bearded and bronzed and pale and clean shaven faces-faces which in spite of wind and weather and toll and sweat had a strange family resemblance. It was unusual that they should be there, but it did not seem strange, so confident was the mother heart that her prayer would be answered. "Mother, I was worried. Your let
